Entering into and Extending Jesus’ Five-Fold Mercy in the Year of Mercy and Beyond

Introduction

- Our theme for this talk is “Entering into and Extending Jesus’ Five-Fold Mercy in the Year of Mercy and Beyond.” We’re now 96 days into the 348-day Jubilee of Mercy which began on December 8 and will continue through November 20. A month ago I was in Rome where Pope Francis commissioned me with 1,141 others around the world (and 726 in Rome, 125 Americans) as Missionaries of Mercy, called to preach about this great gift, to be able to forgive even sins that because of the canonical penalties associated with them are reserved to the Holy See, and to be special “signs and instruments” of God’s merciful closeness. So I’m very happy to the chance to try to act on that commission to work here with you!
- The main theme of my talk will be seeking to learn from Jesus how he wants to us to receive the various manifestations of his mercy so that, transformed by them, we may may be able to go out and bring that mercy to others. But in order for us to appreciate that theme, I think it’s key for us to grasp both the “why” and the “urgency” behind this ecclesiastical holy year.
- The ultimate reason for an extraordinary Jubilee of Mercy now is because Pope Francis is convinced that we are now living in a kairos of mercy
 - Pope Francis said in the interview aboard Shepherd One coming back from Brazil that the Church must follow the path of mercy and that this is a special need of our time: “I believe that this is a kairos: this time is a kairos of mercy.” John Paul II had the first intuition of this, when he began with Faustina Kowalska, the Divine Mercy... He had something, he had intuited that this was a need in our time.”
 - John Paul II believed it was a special time of mercy because he thought that one of the greatest crises the human race faces is unexpiated guilt. After two World Wars and the Cold War, after the Holocaust, after the genocides in Armenia, the Ukraine, Cambodia, Rwanda, Bosnia and Darfur, after so many atrocities from tyrannical governments, after the waterfalls of blood flowing from more than two billion abortions worldwide, after the sins that have destroyed so many families, after so much physical and sexual abuse, after lengthy crime logs in newspapers every day, after the scourge of terrorism, after so much hurt and pain, the terrible weight of collective guilt crushes not only individuals but burdens structures and whole societies. The modern world is like one big Lady Macbeth, compulsively washing our hands to remove the blood from them, but there is no earthly detergent powerful enough to take the blemishes away. We can converse with psychiatrists and psychologists, but their words and prescriptions can only help us deal with our guilt, not eliminate it. We can confess ourselves to bartenders, but they can only dispense Absolut vodka, not absolution, and inebriation never brings expiation. We can escape reality through distractions and addictions — drugs, sports, entertainment, materialism, food, power, lust, and others — but none can adequately anaesthetize the pain in our soul from the suffering we’ve caused or witnessed. Whether we admit it, whether the world realizes it or not, we’re longing for redemption. We’re yearning for a second, third or seventy-times-seventh chance. We’re pining for forgiveness, reconciliation, and a restoration of goodness. We’re hankering for a giant reset button for ourselves and for the world. And if we can’t have that personal and collective do over, then at least we ache for liberation from the past and, like Zacchaeus or Ebenezer Scrooge, for a chance make up for has been done. We want atonement. And God responds to our age’s great desire and need for expiation with his mercy. That’s what it means that we’re now living in a kairos of mercy.
 - In his recent book length interview, The Name of God is Mercy, with Andrea Tornielli, Pope Francis spoke about this at length.

- This is a time of mercy. The Church is showing her maternal side, her motherly face, to a humanity that is wounded. She does not wait for the wounded to knock on her doors, she looks for them on the streets, she gathers them in, she embraces them, she takes care of them, she makes them feel loved. And so, as I said, and I am ever more convinced of it, this is a kairos, our era is a kairos of mercy, an opportune time.
 - In the homily he gave during the Vespers Service in which he promulgated the papal bull Misericordiae Vultus, he said, “Many question in their hearts: why a Jubilee of Mercy today? Simply because the Church, in this time of great historical change, is called to offer more evident signs of God’s presence and closeness. ... This is a time for the Church to rediscover the meaning of the mission entrusted to her by the Lord on the day of Easter: to be a sign and an instrument of the Father’s mercy (cf. Jn 20:21-23). For this reason, the Holy Year must keep alive the desire to know how to welcome the numerous signs of the tenderness which God offers to the whole world and, above all, to those who suffer, who are alone and abandoned, without hope of being pardoned or feeling the Father’s love. A Holy Year to experience strongly within ourselves the joy of having been found by Jesus, the Good Shepherd who has come in search of us because we were lost. A Jubilee to receive the warmth of his love when he bears us upon his shoulders and brings us back to the Father’s house. A year in which to be touched by the Lord Jesus and to be transformed by his mercy, so that we may become witnesses to mercy. Here, then, is the reason for the Jubilee: because this is the time for mercy. It is the favorable time to heal wounds, a time not to be weary of meeting all those who are waiting to see and to touch with their hands the signs of the closeness of God, a time to offer everyone the way of forgiveness and reconciliation.”
- In response to this kairos, Pope Francis is putting God’s mercy center stage and calling us all of us, having received God’s mercy, to seek to bring it to others.
 - In the first and most famous of his now many interviews, with Fr. Antonio Spadaro in September 2013, Pope Francis said priests that “the ministers of the Church must be ministers of mercy above all.” But we can expand this to include all those who serve others in the Church’s name. We’re all called to be ministers of mercy above all.
 - Mercy has been the central theme of the Pontificate of Pope Francis. I’ll never forget being present in St. Peter’s Square for his first Angelus meditation, March 17, 2013. His beautiful words in Italian remain indelible in my memory in which he proclaimed the beauty of God’s undying mercy as not only Jesus’ most powerful message but the Church’s most powerful continued message to the world: “Jesus has this message for us: mercy. I think – and I say it with humility – that this is the Lord’s most powerful message: mercy. It was he himself who said: “I did not come for the righteous”. The righteous justify themselves. Go on, then, even if you can do it, I cannot! But they believe they can. “I came for sinners” (Mk 2:17)... The Lord never tires of forgiving: never! It is we who tire of asking his forgiveness. Let us ask for the grace not to tire of asking forgiveness, because he never tires of forgiving.”
 - We see on Easter Sunday evening that just as God the Father sent his Son as the Lamb of God to take away the sins of the world, so Jesus was sending the apostles, and their successors, to continue that saving, merciful work. Pope Francis is using his office, his words, and his example, to do everything he can to get people to receive gratefully and often this gift.
- Understanding our need for God’s mercy is key for us to recognize who we really are. And it’s essential for our people to know who God is, who they are, and how loved they are.
 - (Conversations with Jorge Bergoglio, El Jesuita) An authentically Christian discipleship begins our recognition that we’re sinners in need of salvation and the concomitant experience that that Savior looks on us with merciful love. “For me, feeling oneself a sinner is one of the most beautiful things that can happen, if it leads to its ultimate consequences” the future Pope Francis said in “El Jesuita.” At the Easter Vigil, he says, we sing “O Felix culpa,” exulting in the “happy sin” that brought us to experience the love of the Redeemer. “When a person becomes conscious that he is a sinner and is saved by Jesus,” Cardinal Bergoglio said, “he proclaims this truth to himself and discovers the pearl of great price, the treasure buried in the field. He discovers the greatest thing in life: that there is someone who loves him profoundly, who gave his life for him.” Many Catholics have sadly not had this fundamental Christian experience. “There are people who believe the right things, who have received catechesis and accepted the Christian faith in some way, but who do not have the experience of having been saved,” he lamented. He then gave a powerful metaphor of what the true experience of God’s mercy is like. “It’s one thing when people tell us a story about someone’s risking his life to save a boy drowning in the river. It’s something else when I’m the one drowning and someone gives his life to save me.” That’s what Christ did for us to save us from the eternal watery grave of the deluge of sin. That’s what we should celebrate every day of our life, just like someone whose life has been saved by a hero would never be able to forget it, not to mention thank him enough. Unfortunately, he said, “There are people to whom you tell the story who don’t see it, who don’t want to see, who don’t want to know what happened to that boy, or who always have escape hatches from the situation of drowning and who therefore lack the experience of who they are. I believe that only we great sinners have this grace.”

- Mercy is essential for understanding who Pope Francis is.
 - In the Sept. 19 interview with Fr. Antonio Spadaro, when he was asked “Who is Jorge Mario Bergoglio?,” he replied, “I am a sinner. This is the most accurate definition. It is not a figure of speech, a literary genre. I am a sinner. . . . The best summary, the one that comes more from the inside and I feel most true is this: I am a sinner whom the Lord has looked upon.” And he repeats: “I am one who is looked upon by the Lord. I always felt my motto, Miserando atque Eligendo [By Having Mercy and by Choosing Him], was very true for me. . . . This is what I said when they asked me if I would accept my election as pontiff.” Then the pope whispers in Latin: “Peccator sum, sed super misericordia et infinita patientia Domini nostri Jesu Christi confisus et in spiritu penitentiae accepto.” I am a sinner, but I trust in the infinite mercy and patience of our Lord Jesus Christ, and I accept in a spirit of penance.”
 - MV 8: The calling of Matthew is also presented within the context of mercy. Passing by the tax collector’s booth, Jesus looked intently at Matthew. It was a look full of mercy that forgave the sins of that man, a sinner and a tax collector, whom Jesus chose – against the hesitation of the disciples – to become one of the Twelve. Saint Bede the Venerable, commenting on this Gospel passage, wrote that Jesus looked upon Matthew with merciful love and chose him: miserando atque eligendo. This expression impressed me so much that I chose it for my episcopal motto
 - Mercy is the fundamental story of his vocation. He said to the 200,000 in St. Peter’s Square on the Vigil of Pentecost (May 18): “One day in particular, though, was very important to me: 21 September 1953. I was almost 17. It was ‘Students’ Day,’ for us the first day of spring — for you the first day of autumn. Before going to the celebration I passed through the parish I normally attended, I found a priest that I did not know and I felt the need to go to confession. For me this was an experience of encounter: I found that someone was waiting for me. Yet I do not know what happened, I can’t remember, I do not know why that particular priest was there whom I did not know, or why I felt this desire to confess, but the truth is that someone was waiting for me. He had been waiting for me for some time. After making my confession I felt something had changed. I was not the same. I had heard something like a voice, or a call. I was convinced that I should become a priest. This experience of faith is important. We say we must seek God, go to him and ask forgiveness, but when we go, he is waiting for us, he is there first! In Spanish we have a word that explains this well: primerear — the Lord always gets there before us, he gets there first, he is waiting for us! To find someone waiting for you is truly a great grace. You go to him as a sinner, but he is waiting to forgive you.”
- So now that we understand that we’re living in a kairos in which each of us is called to grasp that we’re great sinners looked at with merciful love by the Lord and to help others to do the same, we can turn to how Jesus seeks to transform us in both of those ways.

Jesus’ Five Ways

- There are many ways to live out the Year of Mercy, but I think perhaps the most fruitful is to ponder and imitate Jesus’ own merciful example. The theme of this Year of Mercy is “Merciful like the Father,” and no one has shown us how to emulate the Father’s Mercy better than the “image of the invisible God” (Col 1:15) himself, the one who identified himself to St. Faustina Kowalska as “Mercy Incarnate.”

- All of Jesus' life is a manifestation of God's loving mercy, but when we look at the demonstrations of that merciful love in the Gospel, we see that they fall into five general categories. In Greek, the synoptic evangelists (Matthew, Mark, Luke) introduce them all by the same verb, splanchnizomai, which in English is normally translated as Jesus' "heart was moved with pity," but since splanchna means "viscera" or "guts" or "womb," a more literal translation would be that Jesus was "sick to his stomach" with compassion as he met people in need. Jesus did five different things in response to these intense cramps of compassion, and I think clearly grasping these five things, opening ourselves up to allowing Jesus to continue to give us his mercy in these ways, imitating his mercy in these five ways and helping others to understand and live out this five-fold mercy, is a straightforward, doable way to live out this Year of Mercy.
- With regard to the importance of entering into Jesus' splanchnizomai to grasp Jesus' compassion, Pope Francis generally agrees, as we see in his recent book-length interview with Andrea Tornielli, The Name of God is Mercy. The Holy Father takes up the subject with regard to Jesus' compassion for the widow of Nain, saying "When the Lord saw her he was moved with pity for her" (7:13). Pope Francis comments, "The Greek verb that indicates this compassion is splanchnizomai, which derives from the word that indicates internal organs or the mother's womb. It is similar to the love of a father and mother who are profoundly moved by their own son; it is a visceral love. God loves us in this way, with compassion and mercy. Jesus does not look at reality from the outside, without letting himself be moved, as if he were taking a picture. He lets himself get involved." And Pope Francis makes a moral exhortation based on it: "This kind of compassion is needed today to conquer the globalization of indifference. This kind of regard is needed when we find ourselves in front of a poor person, an outcast, or a sinner. This is the compassion that nourishes the awareness that we, too, are sinners."
- What I'd like to do is to ponder in turn the five expressions of Jesus' visceral compassion, which expresses his fidelity to himself in creating us in his image such that he seeks always to try to restore us to that image, as well as the care for us that exceeds a mother's love for a child. All five expressions of mercy go together as five different ways God manifests his loving compassion toward us.

Teaching

- St. Mark tells us, "When he saw the vast crowd, his heart was moved with pity for them, for they were like sheep without a shepherd; and he began to teach them many things" (Mk 6:34).
- Jesus was constantly preaching and teaching. He was teaching in synagogues, in the Temple precincts, on mountainsides, in plains, from Peter's boat slightly off shore, in various homes, along the paths of his journeys and even as a boy among the masters. He taught by means of Parables, antinomies, homespun images, current events, straight-forward rabbinical techniques using Sacred Scripture, by writing on the ground, and ultimately by example.
- He identified himself as one who had come to "proclaim the Gospel to the poor," as someone who had come to "give witness to the truth." So important was teaching that when "everyone was looking for him" after he had spent so many hours healing people one-by-one that he had to escape early before dawn to pray, he responded, "To the other towns also I must proclaim the good news of the kingdom of God, because for this purpose I have been sent." He was the personal answer to the prayer of Psalms, "Teach us your way, O Lord," we pray in the Psalms, "so that I may walk in your truth" (Ps 86). Jesus came to say, "I am the Truth, I am the Way. . . . Follow me." He actualized the Word of God, saying, "Today this Scripture is fulfilled in your hearing." He taught with an authority that amazed and astonished his contemporaries — "no one has ever spoken like this man" — and infuriated his adversaries.
- The Church as a whole has continued Jesus' merciful teaching
 - Spiritual works of mercy: instructing the ignorant, counseling the doubtful, admonishing those who are wayward.
 - Magisterium
 - Schools
 - Universities
 - Catechetical programs.
 - Great teacher saints who invited people to share in that mission. St. Elizabeth Seton. St. Francis Xavier Cabrini. St. John Bosco. St. Angela Merici, St. John Baptiste de la Salle.
- Our approach to Jesus' teaching

- Do we allow Jesus to continue to teach us in his mercy?
- Are we good disciples of the Master? Do we listen attentively to what he says and follow him? Do we do so zealously?
- Jesus reveals his teaching to little ones (Lk 10:21-22). Are we little enough to receive his mercy?
- Do we pay attention to the sources with which he teaches us?
 - Prayer
 - Sacred Scripture — Story of Fr. Don from Cleveland
 - Catechism — Do we know it? Are we “literate” in the faith?
 - Magisterial Documents — Do we read them?
- Do we take advantage of the incredible opportunities presented to us in information age (books, websites, videos, audio CDs and more)?
- Do we seek to expose others to Jesus’ teaching? Do we pass on our amazement, to our kids, godchildren, grandchildren? Do we train them to pass on, as of the first importance, what they themselves have received, “drilling” the faith into children?
- The Church’s goal is that we be and help form evangelized evangelizers?
- This ministry of the truth is not adequately appreciated in a relativistic age, but Jesus wants us to receive the mercy of his authoritative teaching and learn it well enough so that we can mercifully pass in on. We need the truth!

Feeding

- Matt. 15:32 Jesus summoned his disciples and said, “My heart is moved with pity for the crowd, for they have been with me now for three days and have nothing to eat. I do not want to send them away hungry, for fear they may collapse on the way.” Then he multiplied the loaves and fish.
- God always responds to our prayer, “Give us this day our daily bread.”
- He cared for the poor, seeking to make sure they had enough to eat.
 - “Whenever you give a lunch or a dinner...” invite the beggars, crippled, lame and blind” (Lk 14)
 - The Parable of Dives et Lazarus (Lk 16).
 - He told the Rich Young Man to give his money to the poor.
- Jesus identified with those who were hungry and thirsty and said whatever we do to them, we do to him.
- He not only fed our material hungers and poverty, but our spiritual hungers and poverty.
 - He told us not to labor for the food that perishes but for the food that endures to eternal life that he would give us.
 - He had us pray for our “supersubstantial bread,” the daily manna he himself gives us.
- The Church
 - The Church continues that mission of mercy of feeding the hungry, giving drink to the thirsty, clothing the naked, welcoming strangers, and caring for the poor and needy in soup kitchens, pantries, St. Vincent de Paul Conference work, Catholic Charities, Catholic Relief Services and more.
 - So many great saints of charity who invited others to share in that mission. St. Vincent de Paul and St. Louise de Marillac. Blessed Teresa of Calcutta. St. John Vianney.
 - The Church also seeks to fill the even greater spiritual hungers. The greatest poverty, Pope Francis said in Evangelii Gaudium, is spiritual poverty. We do so foremost in the Eucharist, allowing Christ to continue to feed people and getting them ready, “properly dressed,” for the banquet.
- Our response
 - Are we grateful to God for giving us our daily bread?
 - Do we have a special concern for those who have no food, or no adequate drinking water, or who are in other circumstances of poverty? Are we aware of where the Lazaruses are and do we sacrifice for them? Do we draw near or figure they’re someone else’s concern?
 - Are we capable of fasting to identify more with the poor and hungry?
 - The power of the story of Les Miserables of the bishop’s kindness to Jean Valjean. Victor Hugo.
 - A few examples
 - Fr. Paul O’Brien and the Cor Unum Center

- St. Anthony's Food Pantry
- The need for wells for clean drinking water in Africa.
- At a spiritual level, do we hunger for God? Do we live a truly Eucharistic life? Can we go without the Eucharist? The martyrs of Abitene — Sine Dominico non possumus — and living a Eucharistic life. Is Jesus, the supersubstantial bread come down from heaven, truly the “source and summit” of our life. Do we make him available to our people?
- During this Year of Mercy, Jesus is hoping that we will be sick to our stomachs that so many go to bed without their stomachs fed.

Healing

- The third expression of mercy was to heal. The evangelists tell us often that Jesus' heart was moved with pity for the multitudes and he responded with healing:
 - Matt. 14:14 When he disembarked and saw the vast crowd, his heart was moved with pity for them, and he cured their sick.
 - Matt. 20:34 Moved with pity, Jesus touched their eyes. Immediately they received their sight, and followed him.
 - Mark 1:41 Moved with pity, he stretched out his hand, touched him, and said to him, “I do will it. Be made clean.”
- Jesus healed lepers, cripples, the blind, the paralyzed, those with fevers, the deaf-mute (ephhatha), hemorrhaging women.
- He did exorcisms, like the Gadarene Demoniac, the exorcisms in the Synagogue, the boy possessed after the Transfiguration.
- He even raised three people we know of from the dead, the daughter of Jairus, the son of the Widow of Nain, and his friend Lazarus.
- The crowds came to him in great number:
 - Whole town was gathered at the door (Mk 2)
 - “Because he had cured man, all who had afflictions kept pushing toward him to touch him.” (Mk 3:10)
- Jesus didn't do “mass healings” but one-by-one to the point of exhaustion. Always leading to something more important, faith, as with Samaritan leper.
- St. Matthew would say of him that he was the fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy, “He took away our infirmities and bore our diseases” (Mt 8:17).
- Jesus' healing on the Sabbaths basically got himself murdered.
- In the Parable of the Good Samaritan, the term splanchnizomai is used to describe why the Samaritan drew near the dying man. According to the interpretation of several doctors of the Church, Jesus is the Good Samaritan and the Church is the inn.
- There was in all of this healing mercy a requirement of faith to receive it.
 - “He didn't work many miracles there because of their lack of faith.”
 - Faith of woman with the hemorrhage. Faith of centurion. Faith of Syro-Phoenician woman.
- The Church
 - The Church continues this work of mercy, caring for the sick, founding hospitals, clinics and nursing homes. This is one of the ordinary ways in which God heals people, by allowing us to cooperate in that healing.
 - The Church also does so ministering to the infirm within parishes. Pastoral care to the sick, homebound, hospitalized.
 - Caring for the grieving.
 - Caring for the psychologically ill, the addicted.
 - Great health care saints who invited people to share in that mission. St. Camillus. St. John of God. Blessed Teresa of Calcutta.
 - In this Year of Mercy, we're all called to a similar compassion, recognizing that in every ill man or woman, Jesus is saying, “I was sick and you cared for me.”

- At a personal level, are we touched by Jesus' mercy in his healing power?
 - Do we go to Jesus with our own infirmities?
 - Do we bring others to him in our prayers?
 - There are still many miracles. Just look at the causes for the canonization of saints. Do we have the faith to ask for them?
 - But at a more basic level, are we Simons of Cyrene caring for those carrying Crosses? True compassion, so that others don't suffer alone. Caring for others, visits to hospitals and nursing homes. Caring for sick family members, especially as they age.
 - Do we ask for ourselves and others the Sacrament of the Anointing of the Sick when we or they are in danger of death due to sickness or old age.
 - JP II in Salvifici Doloris: Suffering unleashes love.
 - 29. Following the parable of the Gospel, we could say that suffering, which is present under so many different forms in our human world, is also present in order to unleash love in the human person, that unselfish gift of one's "I" on behalf of other people, especially those who suffer. The world of human suffering unceasingly calls for, so to speak, another world: the world of human love; and in a certain sense man owes to suffering that unselfish love which stirs in his heart and actions. The person who is a "neighbor" cannot indifferently pass by the suffering of another: this in the name of fundamental human solidarity, still more in the name of love of neighbor. He must "stop," "sympathize," just like the Samaritan of the Gospel parable. The parable in itself expresses a deeply Christian truth, but one that at the same time is very universally human. ... In view of all this, we can say that the parable of the Samaritan of the Gospel has become one of the essential elements of moral culture and universally human civilization.
 - 26. While the first great chapter of the Gospel of suffering is written down, as the generations pass, by those who suffer persecutions for Christ's sake, simultaneously another great chapter of this Gospel unfolds through the course of history. This chapter is written by all those who suffer together with Christ, uniting their human sufferings to his salvific suffering. ... In those people there is fulfilled the Gospel of suffering, and, at the same time, each of them continues in a certain sense to write it: they write it and proclaim it to the world, they announce it to the world in which they live and to the people of their time. Down through the centuries and generations it has been seen that in suffering there is concealed a particular power that draws a person interiorly close to Christ, a special grace. To this grace many saints, such as Saint Francis of Assisi, Saint Ignatius of Loyola and others, owe their profound conversion. A result of such a conversion is not only that the individual discovers the salvific meaning of suffering but above all that he becomes a completely new person. He discovers a new dimension, as it were, of his entire life and vocation. This discovery is a particular confirmation of the spiritual greatness which in man surpasses the body in a way that is completely beyond compare. When this body is gravely ill, totally incapacitated, and the person is almost incapable of living and acting, all the more do interior maturity and spiritual greatness become evident, constituting a touching lesson to those who are healthy and normal. This interior maturity and spiritual greatness in suffering are certainly the result of a particular conversion and cooperation with the grace of the Crucified Redeemer. It is he himself who acts at the heart of human sufferings through his Spirit of truth, through the consoling Spirit. It is he who transforms, in a certain sense, the very substance of the spiritual life, indicating for the person who suffers a place close to himself. It is he—as the interior Master and Guide—who reveals to the suffering brother and sister this wonderful interchange, situated at the very heart of the mystery of the Redemption. Suffering is, in itself, an experience of evil. But Christ has made suffering the firmest basis of the definitive good, namely the good of eternal salvation. By his suffering on the Cross, Christ reached the very roots of evil, of sin and death. He conquered the author of evil, Satan, and his permanent rebellion against the Creator. To the suffering brother or sister Christ discloses and gradually reveals the horizons of the Kingdom of God: the horizons of a world converted to the Creator, of a world free from sin, a world being built on the saving power of love. And slowly but effectively, Christ leads into this world, into this Kingdom of the Father, suffering man, in a certain sense through the very heart of his suffering. For suffering cannot be transformed and changed by a grace from outside, but from within. And Christ through his own salvific suffering is very much present in every human suffering, and can act from within that suffering by the powers of his Spirit of truth, his consoling Spirit. ... But in general it can be said that almost always the individual enters suffering with a typically human protest and with the question "why". He asks the meaning of his suffering and seeks an answer to this question on the human level. Certainly he often puts this question to God, and to Christ. Furthermore, he cannot help noticing that the one to whom he puts the question is himself suffering and wishes to answer him from the Cross, from the heart of his own suffering. Nevertheless, it often takes time, even a long time, for this answer to begin to be interiorly perceived. For Christ does not answer directly and he does not answer in the abstract this human questioning about the meaning of suffering. Man hears Christ's saving answer as he himself gradually becomes a sharer in the sufferings of Christ. The answer which comes through this sharing, by way of the interior encounter with the Master, is in itself something more than the mere abstract answer to the question about the meaning of suffering. For it is above all a call. It is a vocation. Christ does not explain in the abstract the reasons for suffering, but before all else he says: "Follow me!". Come! Take part through your suffering in this work of saving the world, a salvation achieved through my suffering! Through my Cross. Gradually, as the individual takes up his cross, spiritually uniting himself to the Cross of Christ, the salvific meaning of suffering is revealed before him. He does not discover this meaning at his own human level, but at the level of the suffering of Christ. At the same time, however, from this level of Christ the salvific meaning of suffering descends to man's level and becomes, in a sense, the individual's personal response. It is then that man finds in his suffering interior peace and even spiritual joy. 27. Saint Paul speaks of such joy in the Letter to the Colossians: "I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake"

Forgiving

- In the Parable of the Prodigal Son, the verb splanchnizomai is used to describe how the Father, “filled with compassion,” forgave his returning, imperfectly contrite boy.
- Everything Jesus did was an application of the forgiveness of sins.
 - We know that God so loved the world that he sent his only Son, not to condemn the world, but so that through him the world may be saved.
 - Jesus came precisely as the Lamb of God to take away the sins of the world.
 - He came to call sinners.
 - He was labeled a “Friend of tax collectors and sinners”
 - MV 8: The relationships [Jesus] forms with the people who approach him manifest something entirely unique and unrepeatable. The signs he works, especially in the face of sinners, the poor, the marginalized, the sick, and the suffering, are all meant to teach mercy. Everything in him speaks of mercy. Nothing in him is devoid of compassion.
 - (July 4, 2013 homily) “When Jesus healed a sick man he was not only a healer. When he taught people — let us think of the Beatitudes — he was not only a catechist, a preacher of morals. When he remonstrated against the hypocrisy of the Pharisees and Sadducees, he was not a revolutionary who wanted to drive out the Romans. No, these things that Jesus did, healing, teaching and speaking out against hypocrisy, were only a sign of something greater that Jesus was doing: he was forgiving sins”. Reconciling the world in Christ in the name of the Father: “this is Jesus' mission. Everything else — healing, teaching, reprimands — are only signs of that deeper miracle which is the re-creation of the world. Thus reconciliation is the re-creation of the world; and the most profound mission of Jesus is the redemption of all of us sinners.
- We can ponder so many of the ways Jesus exercised this mercy par excellence.
 - Healing of the Paralyzed Man — Forgiveness of Sins even more important than a physical healing

- Simon the Pharisee's House. We love as much as we recognize we've been forgiven. Receiving mercy is essential for us to love God. To recognize we're sinners in need of a savior.

- Parable of the Ten Thousand Talents and 100 denarii
- The three parables of Lk 15
- The Samaritan Woman.
- Zacchaeus
- Peter
- He called us to forgive even our enemies
- First two words from the Cross: "Father, forgive them" and the forgiveness of the Good Thief.
- But as we've been talking about mercy isn't cheap. It precedes our conversion but whether we receive it is dependent on our repentance. That's why Jesus, sometimes forcefully, calls us to conversion.
 - Woman caught in adultery. Jesus doesn't condemn, but he calls us to a change of life.
 - Cutting off hands, plucking out eyes
 - Plank and speck
 - Comparing Capernaum and Bethsaida to Sodom and Gomorrah, to Tyre and Sidon. Wants us to convert.
 - Nineveh and Queen of Sheba will condemn because they repented.
 - Urgency: Falling tower in Siloam, Pilate's massacre of people in the temple (Lk 13)
 - His jeremiads against the Scribes and the Pharisees
 - His focus on the weightier things of the law — judgment, mercy and faithfulness (Mt 23:23)
 - "When he got home away from the crowd his disciples questioned him about the parable. He said to them, "Are even you likewise without understanding? Do you not realize that everything that goes into a person from outside cannot defile, since it enters not the heart but the stomach and passes out into the latrine?" (Thus he declared all foods clean.) "But what comes out of a person, that is what defiles. From within people, from their hearts, come evil thoughts, unchastity, theft, murder, adultery, greed, malice, deceit, licentiousness, envy, blasphemy, arrogance, folly. All these evils come from within and they defile." (Mk 7)
- The Church
 - The Church exists to continue Jesus' mission of reconciling the world to the Father, to continue giving the grace of his forgiveness. The importance of the Sacrament of Confession and of bringing others to receive God's mercy.
 - The Church also exists to form peacemakers, not peace-wishers, to go out of our way as mediators. Having received God's forgiveness, we have to go out to help reconcile the world to God in Christ.
- Ourselves
 - Do we recognize our need for God's mercy? Do we come to receive it and receive it well? With a good examination of conscience, true sorrow and a firm resolution to avoid sin and supplant it with virtue?
 - Do we convert? Do we cut out of our lives what is incompatible?
 - Do we forgive those who have hurt us or do we nurse those grudges?
 - "Be compassionate as your heavenly father is compassionate" (Lk 6:27)
 - "Forgive and you will be forgiven" (Lk 6:37)
 - Are we peacemakers? Are we actually rabble-rousers and troublemakers? Do we try to help people reconcile.
 - Do we make fraternal correction when needed?
 - "If your brother sins against you, go and tell him his fault..." (Mt 18). Leave gift at altar and go reconcile.

Praying and Calling

- The last act of mercy is not as conspicuous as the others. When Jesus' heart was moved with pity for the crowds because they were "mangled and abandoned like sheep without a shepherd," he told his disciples, "The harvest is abundant but the laborers are few, so pray the Master of the Harvest to send out laborers for his harvest” (Mt 9:36).

- One of his acts of visceral compassion was to pray for harvesters.
- And then he immediately did something else. Jesus called from among the praying disciples 12 to be apostles. So his calling of laborers to continue his work is similarly an act of mercy.
- God wants, and the suffering world needs, “laborers” of mercy, hard-workers who, sick to their stomach over the needs of others, will carry out together with Jesus his continued work of teaching, healing, feeding, forgiving, praying and calling. He’s calling us to pray for them, and then to realize, in one way or the other, we’re praying for ourselves, and others are praying for us, all the way back to this Gospel scene. People are praying for us in convents. People are praying for us in prisons. People are praying for us in parishes. People are praying for us with their children around dinner tables. People are praying for us in heaven.
- As St. Paul mentions in his beautiful chapter on how each of us has received a manifestation of the Holy Spirit for the common good, not all are called to be harvesters of mercy in the same way. Not everyone is a head, or an eye, or a handle or a foot. We need everything. Likewise we need specialists who can forgive sins in God’s name, others who can be on the front lines of health care, others who can teach, others who have the patience and organizational ability to feed. But Jesus has given us all a vocation to continue his mercy.
- The Church
 - The Church exists to continue the prayer of Jesus, the prayer of the Upper Room, the prayer of the decenarium leading to Pentecost, that prayer for harvesters.
 - The Church exists to be a vocational school, teaching people to become holy Christians and laborers of mercy just as much as vocational schools train people to be plumbers, electricians, HVAC installers and more.
 - Jesus sends out not just the 12 but the 72 and then sends out the 500 disciples to the whole world.
 - “Just as the Father sent me, so I send you!”
 - He calls the weak and makes them strong in bearing witness to them.
- Our response
 - During this Holy Year, Jesus is calling us to see that we’re the response to centuries of prayer.
 - He wants us to be “laborers” in his vineyard, not “bodies.”
 - He also wants us praying that everyone become a laborer continuing Christ’s mission of mercy. Miserando atque eligendo.
 - We’re often asked why there is a “vocations shortage.” There are various reasons, but one of them is because there’s not enough prayer for vocations. And that goes throughout the Church. We’re not praying for laborers and because we’re not praying, many people aren’t likewise in a position to hear the call of the Lord, summoning them if not at 6 am, at 9, 12, 3 or 5, to his vineyard. Do we look at the work of the Church as a work of mercy for which we need all hands on deck?
 - Have we become clericalized, thinking the main work of the Church happens in the sanctuary on Sundays rather than in the transformation of the world? Do we think that the works of mercy are meant to be done by others or that we’re supposed to do them in an exemplary way?
- Conclusion
 - This Jubilee Year is a time when Jesus wants us, with him, to observe how many are lost and instruct them how to follow Him who is the Way; to see how many are suffering physically, psychologically and spiritually and become nurses of the Divine Physician; to notice the multitudes starving physically or spiritually and give them the nourishment he provides; to spot the multitudes carrying the wounds of unexpiated guilt or severed relationships and bring them to receive and extend God’s mercy; and in all of this, to become laborers of mercy and, praying insistently for others to join us in becoming the compassionate “upset stomach” of the Mystical Body of Christ.
